

Oasis and Elaflex teaming up

New Zealand based CNG component manufacturer Oasis becomes member of the Elaflex group

In April 2017, ELAFLEX HIBY Tanktechnik, based in Hamburg (Germany) acquired a major stake in Oasis Engineering Ltd of Tauranga (New Zealand).

Oasis is an internationally operating specialist for valves and couplings used in the compressed natural gas (CNG) industry. In the last decades, Oasis has established a strong reputation as supplier of CNG components and systems for filling stations and gas delivery networks. The company supplies standard products of their own design and customised or make-to-order engineering parts as required, to customers in over 40 countries.

"This exciting partnership brings together two highly innovative companies both well respected in the fuel handling world" says Andy Cameron, Managing Director of Oasis Engineering. "The result will be a tremendous improvement in the motorist's user-experience for alternative fuels like CNG, hydrogen and biogas."

Worldwide CNG trailer companies are rapidly adopting the new Oasis high flow breakaway and coupling systems. "These products were game changing for natural gas companies" says Mr Cameron "with them the whole economics of road transport for gas positively changed."

Stefan Kunter, Managing Director of Elaflex: "The complementary product ranges mutually allow us to further expand our expertise with fluid energy transfer. Eventually important, both organisations share similar values and visions such as our premium quality approach and close cooperation with customers, to constantly improve."

Existing distribution structures will remain untouched. "There will be few change, and if, only to the benefit of our customers" both managers state. Oasis will continue to independently operate, with unchanged staff and – with Andy Cameron, as Oasis's managing director.
